

Would You Pay $90 For Internet Advertising That Never Expires?

Dear Internet Marketing Manager,

To get your company noticed on the Internet, there's Pay-Per-Click advertising, and there's Free Search. Unlike Pay-Per-Click, which expires when your budget runs out, FREE listings on search engines like Google, Bing and Yahoo last as long as someone is looking for your company, product or service.

I have a proven method to get your website and products listed multiple times on Google, Bing and Yahoo Search Engines:

I will write THREE unique press releases/product stories and place them on the following websites:

<http://www.prlog.org> * <http://webwriteups.hubpages.com> * <http://www.fullpagepress.com>
(Other PR websites available - inquire)

Total charge: $90.00 (or $30.00 per press release/product story if you want fewer)

I write concise, comprehensive content - the kind of content search engines like to rank high in their indexes. I also carefully research search terms (keywords) for your company, product and services - the keywords and phrases customers use to find you. The result is press releases and product stories that continuously appear in the free (organic) search results on Google, Bing and Yahoo. All loaded with links directly to your website!

When a potential customer submits a search for your product, now you have not one (your website), but THREE more websites with information about your company and service! In addition to the product information provided in the press release, ample links directly to your website are included, providing an easy, quick way for the reader to visit your website next!

This approach works! I have product stories over a year old, still appearing on pages 1 - 4 of Google, and generating thousands of hits for the product written about.

PS: Did you know search engines index - and list - every page in your website? The more pages your website has, the more pages search engines have to index. I can write additional content for your website, to be added to new or existing pages. Contact me to discuss!
